Cops crack cold case

Glachan Charleslin Randy Francis

Strong eyewitnesses, persistence keys to solving 32-month-old case

Sgt. Anthony "Butch" Lupinacci embraces Dijana Wilson following a news conference at Stamford police headquarters on Thursday where police announced the apprehension of Randy Francis and Glachan Charleslin in the July 7, 2012, murder of Wilson's brother, Darius Jones.

By John Nickerson

STAMFORD — Through muffled sobs in a second-floor conference room at police headquarters Thursday afternoon, Dijana Wilson remembered the last time she saw her brother, Darius Jones, on July 7, 2012. He told her he was going to a cookout on Stamford's East Side that night.

At about 6 the next morning she got the call that Jones, 22, had been shot through the heart and killed outside a block party on Custer Street the night before, when three other people were also wounded by gunfire.

After nearly three long years, Wilson, who was adopted into the Jones family with four other sisters, said she had all but given up hope that her brother's killers would ever be found. This Thursday began much like the one in July 2012, but instead of it including news

Mourners created a memorial for Darius Jones on Custer Street in Stamford after he was shot nearby on July 7, 2012. Police made arrests in the cold case this week.

of a death, the morning brought messages of hope from her friends saying Stamford police had arrested her brother's accused killers.

"Nobody thought these people was going to get caught. Everybody thought, I just thought, everybody just gave up on them because it has been over two years," Wilson said with tears running down her face. "I'm happy. I may not look like it, but I'm happy."

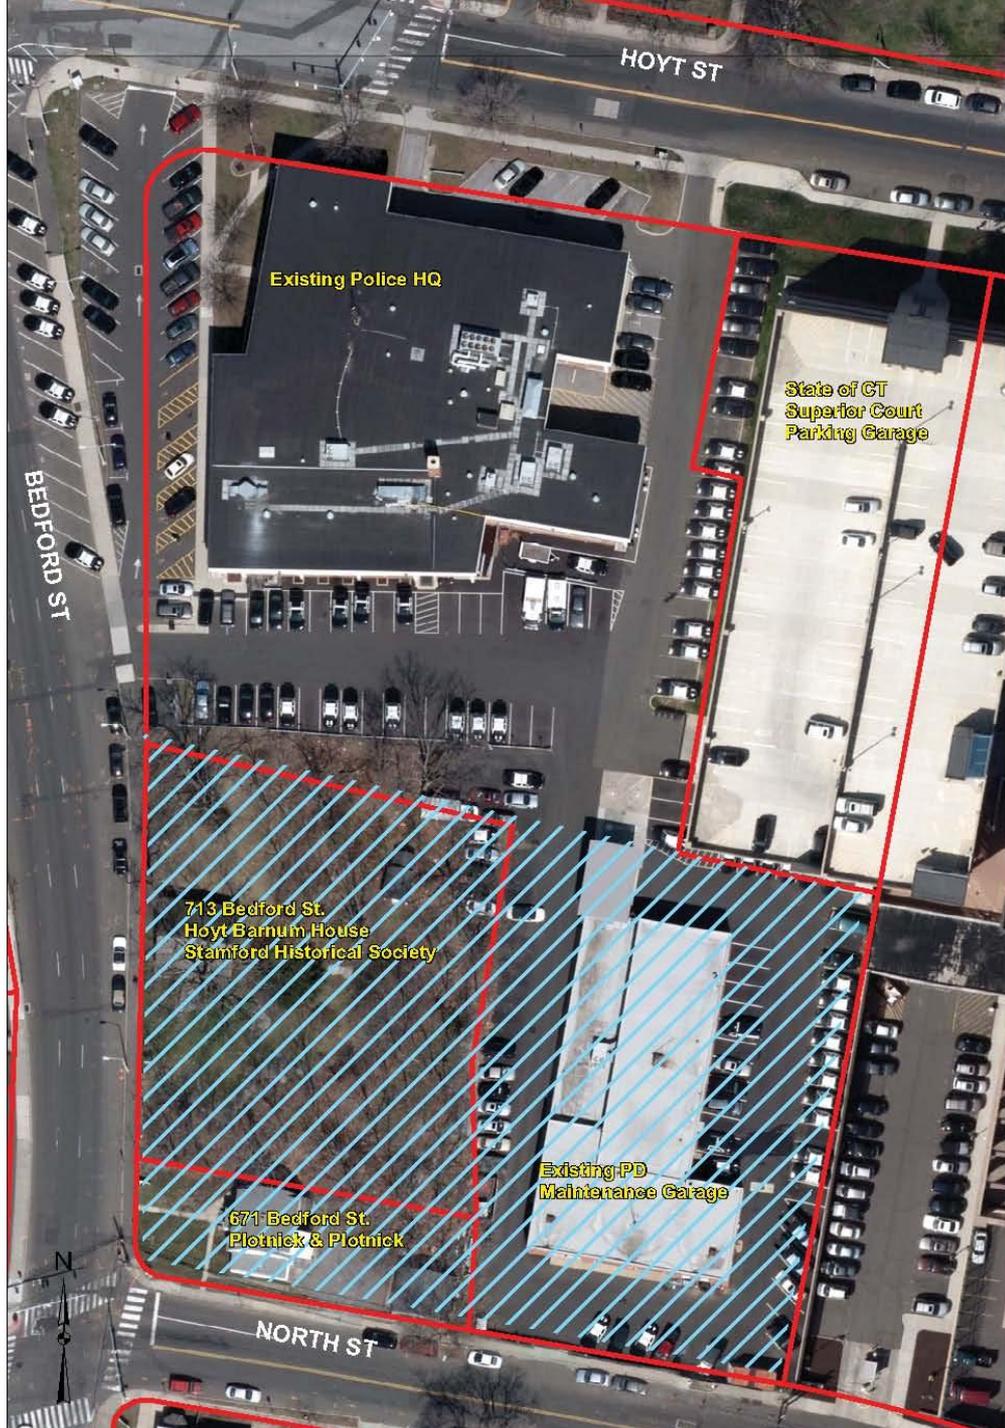

At about 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Stamford police swept in to the Spotted Horse Tavern in Westport and arrested busboy Glachan Charleslin, 23, of Marion Street, Bridgeport, and brought him back to Stamford to charge him with Jones' murder 32 months ago. Early Thursday, police arrested Randy Francis, 24, of Sterling Road in Stamford, and charged him with murder.

Charleslin was arraigned at the Stamford courthouse early Thursday afternoon, when Judge Bruce Hudeck, who signed Charleslin's arrest warrant, ordered that he be held in lieu of a $2.5 million bond. He is due back in court April 23. Francis did not make it to court and is scheduled to be arraigned Friday.

Misread Signal Leads to Deadly South Norwalk Train Wreck – Who Knew?
On May 6, 1853, the engineer of the 8 am New York and New Haven Railroad train bound from Manhattan to Boston failed to note that the drawbridge at South Norwalk was open to let a steamer pass. The train plunged into the river, and nearly 40 passengers were drowned. Leslie's Illustrated News, May 21, 1853 - Connecticut Historical Society
